She is becoming quite frustrated because she has notice team members on a few of her projects are missing meetings, deadlines, and having miscommunications due to disorganized schedules and calendars.

Knowing that these miscommunications and the lack of organization among her teams can cause delays and failure in major projects she must come up with a solution to get the team back on track before the issue gets worst.

While surfing the internet, she came across the website ShareMe, which is a new age calendar/ organization website that has many features that makes it almost impossible to miss anything but also fun to plan and organize event! Something she has never seen before!

After familiarizing herself with the app, she immediately shared the website with the company officials and urge for the purchase of the business version for every employee to use. She instantly gained approval and is planning the training to present the program to her team members.

During the training Zara noticed how her team members enjoyed the website and looked forward to using it regularly. She was satisfied with her findings and hopes this will make her team more organized than ever.

One month later, Zara was able to complete two projects ahead of their due dates, while also meeting their requirements and goals. Feeling accomplished and happy with her team, she gave all of the members a bonus and they celebrated with a party!

STORYBOARD Suzy Lin

By: Sai Sivani Vishnubhotla

Suzy Lin is very diligent and productive when it comes to meeting deadlines and usually on the top of her game. She has just been assigned by her boss to work in a group, and she isn't very happy about this new task as none of her colleagues are willing to do the work. She fears that working in a group will result in her doing all of the work by herself.

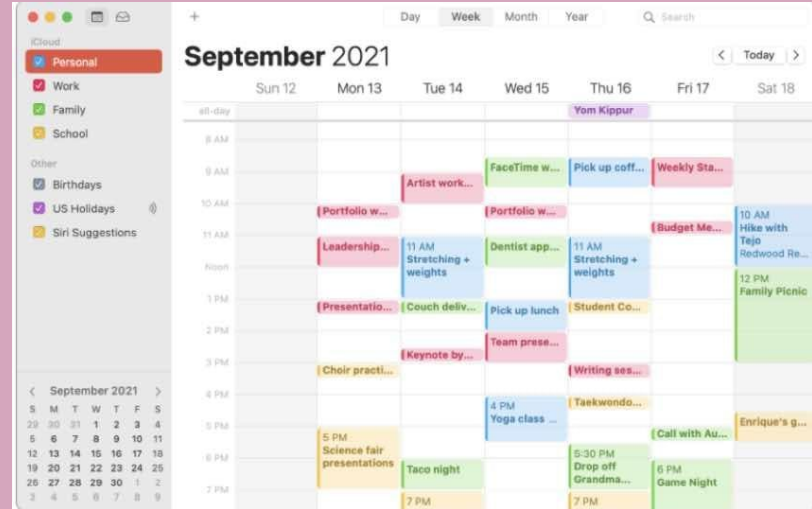

It is the day before the project is due. Like she expected, Suzy Lin is working on a group project all by herself as her colleagues are out partying. This seems to be a recurring event in her life everytime she works in a group: colleagues push their parts of the project till the end, and Suzy has to end up doing all of the work for them.

Suzy is really frustrated, but feels it is rude to bring up the issue to her colleagues. She calls her mom and talks to her mom that she always makes sure she has every day marked off on the calendar so she can meet all of her deadlines. “I just wish there was some way we could just share a calendar with my colleagues so I don’t have to stress so much”, she says desperately. Her mom gasps and explains to her there is this one app called ShareMe which she uses with her friends.

Suzy listens to her mom and downloads the app and it is like a game changer as she can share this calendar with all of her friends and she can also send reminders to them, so that they can all stay on task for the next project. She decides tomorrow at work, she will propose this new idea.

Suzy proposes this new idea and her colleagues seem very supportive of this idea and all join in on the calendar and work together on getting the due dates for the next project together. They all apologize to Suzy and decide to work better.

After a week, the next project is due and she sends everyone a reminder and everyone does their work. She is now happy with working with her colleagues and the project is done more efficiently:)

Storyboard: Sally Smith

By Casey Vu

Sally completely forgot to show up to her youngest child's first soccer match and cater the game. She accidentally made plans with a friend on the day of the match. Now parents of the other children are upset with her and she's sad that she missed her child's first match.

Sally is stressed out because she's having a hard time balancing her work, family, and social life. With two kids with different hobbies, a hard job, and a social life she's trying to hold onto, she's struggling to manage all three.

Sally comes up with the idea of creating a calendar to manage her time. She hangs the calendar in her bathroom; however, she soon finds out that she barely looks at the calendar or updates it. So, she finds herself facing the same problem she had before.

Before bed, Sally goes on Facebook for some personal time to herself. She sees an ad for an app called ShareMe.

She is amazed by the features this app has. She can easily access it anywhere instead of just her bathroom, she gets reminders for the dates she marks as important, and she loves that there's also shared calendars which is exactly what she needs.

Now, Sally has two calendars that she uses daily within the app. She has one for her close friend group to see their availability and future plans for the group. She has another calendar for her family to see what her husbands up to, date nights, soccer games, school events, etc. Sally is a lot less stressed now and happy.

By Alexis Peters

Leah is a bio major/pre-med and always feels stressed because of her busy schedule. Her weekdays consist of classes and going to office hours. She always wonders how other students seem to have so much time to do other things outside of school.

After the first few weeks of college, she realizes how inconsistent her routine is, which has affected her sleep schedule and ability to focus on school, which makes her more stressed when she doesn't do as well on exams.

She downloads ShareMe, a customizable and shareable calendar, in hopes that she can become more organized and manage her time. She also wants to find convenient times that she can study with her friends.

Leah's friends also download the app and now they can compare all of their daily/weekly schedules at once. This makes it easier for them to determine the best times to eat lunch or dinner together, as well as study in the library.

Leah realizes how much easier and organized her life seems after using ShareMe. She is able to get 7-8 hours of sleep every night and still have time to attend club meetings during the day and have fun during the weekends.
